

ADELAIDE STAR TRAINER TO JOIN MRWED

September 30, 2007: Marc Ratcliffe Workplace Education and Development (MRWED), one of Australia's leading providers of the Certificate IV in Training and Assessment, is expanding its national operations.

After a rigorous application and interview process MRWED is pleased to announce the appointment of Adelaide star trainer, Andrew Inglis. Andrew has an impeccable reputation in training, most recently coordinating and facilitating international study programs. Andrew has also worked on projects involving indigenous Australian education and training, as well as providing pathways to employment through individual coaching. It is this combination of experience and skills which makes Andrew Inglis one of the most sort after trainers in Australia.

“Andrew is a highly skilled Trainer who possesses a unique blend of experience and talent. Andrew has that special ‘X-factor’ of entertainment and knowledge which is essential to being an effective MRWED trainer. It is with great pride that I am able to welcome him to the MRWED team.” said Marc Ratcliffe, Principal and Founder of MRWED.
